

Wenlock Priory

This was a must because we are interested in historical buildings or in this case historical ruins and although the site is not large it is a pleasure to be there and spend an hour in peace and silence. Françoise spend some time doing sketches. The website is <https://www.english-heritage.org.uk/visit/places/wenlock-priory/>

A 'lavabo' where the monks washed before going into the refectory for their meals.

it was very nice to come back to the bed-and-breakfast as there is always a fire going. The eating area is in the same room as the pottery exhibition so you are never far from the action. Our favourite breakfast, which we had twice, was salmon and scrambled eggs on a lightly done brown toast.
